LETTER FROM KIERA

As we move into February and Black History Month, I think about the legacy of social justice movements uniting toward addressing common goals. The most successful movements have always looked at the intersectionality of oppressions toward connecting us to each other, acknowledging that so many of us have layered identities which create an intricate web of who we are which connects us to the movements we fight for. The Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr. stated that “Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere.”

All injustice provides us the opportunity to learn to be more effective supporters, activists and allies.

We created the newsletter and events this month to address African-American history. You will see opportunities to attend events to support exploring black identities, movements, and history. The Center has always been and continues to be a place that provides space for complex, multilayered conversations regarding race and sexual identity. Poet and activist Audre Lorde said, “It is not our differences that divide us. It is our inability to recognize, accept, and celebrate those differences.” In this spirit, I encourage you to take part in events this month and be a part of meaningful conversations about race, white privilege, and social justice, as so many of you have done before, toward the goal of creating a stronger LGBT movement.

Sincerely,
Kiera Pollock, M.S.W.,
Director of Senior Services

But like love the archers are blind
Upon the green night, the piercing saetas leave traces of warm lily.
The keel of the moon breaks through purple clouds and their quivers fill with dew.
Ay, but like love the archers are blind!

Pero como el amor los saeteros están ciegos.
Sobre la noche verde, las saetas, dejan rastros de lirio caliente.
